

Apparently, everyone was awake(ned) at 3 A.M.

Tony Romm

Last week, I wrote a piece analyzing Sen. Barack Obama's, D-Ill., VP text message gimmick. To offer my argument a bit more credence, check out the statistics that The New York Times reported in its politics blog, The Caucus, earlier today:

"Surely most subscribers didn't see the [3 A.M. text] message until they woke up on their own. The announcement spurred early morning texting by recipients of the message. The wireless provider Sprint Nextel said traffic on its SMS phone number for the Obama campaign rose by 255 percent following the announcement."

Sprint Nextel, for the record, has about 59.7 million customers.
